Whole Foods was evil well before being assumed into Amazon. They knew about bad ground beef and internal docs showed execs saying "E. Coli? No big deal. So a few people will get the runs..." until an 8 year old boy dies.

Note that this is *DC* Whole Foods. I'll have to check the one near me, 30 mins outside DC, but I suspect this has a lot to do with the flash mob shoplifting nonsense. I do agree with the personal tracking issues, though.

Kind of works out for the democrat mentality: Create a lax, dangerous, crime-filled environment. Then impose “solutions” to that crime by treating everyone as potential criminals and tracking everything they do.

Exactly, through their policies, the leftist, globalist minded Democrats cause anarchy and then “solve” the problem through domination. The globalists want to take away all freedoms in this once great nation.

A couple of years down the road you will want to buy your regular steak and you won't be permitted to take it from the meat area because your meat quota will have been exceeded. Then you will go to the ice cream and you can't get that either because they are reading your insulin levels (via 5G and the graphene oxide in your body from the vax) and have determined you should not have ice cream. We could go on and on with these control scenarios but it will be worse than anything we can now imagine, because TOOLS (people who go along with it and help it happen) will say, "It's no big deal"

This is not about tracking. This is not about shoplifting.

It is about eventual total control of every purchase, including food. It will be used to deny people the ability to even buy food unless they except the mark.

I just got a letter from the electric company. Two years ago they jacked the price of electricity by 30% for anyone resisting their installation of "smart meters", saying they were only putting them in so as to reduce the "hazard" of human beings having to come check the readings. I saw through their BS at the time and complained, of course futilely.

The letter now says you can "opt in" to variable peak/non-peak rates to "save money" if you "choose" to shift your usage to off peak times, like 3 am like all good proletarians do.

You know damn well they are monitoring your usage every minute of the day, and can detect what types of electrical equipment you are using based on power draw and signal artifacts. They will be able to throttle you if your social credit score goes below par for something evil like using an air conditioner while the sun is hottest. Yeah, those "smart meters" were just for the social well being of the poor meter checkers. Yep, are you dumb enough to believe that now?

I enjoy shopping at our little Whole Foods store in Fayetteville, AR, even when they were all masked up.

If this QR code entry was ever implemented at that store, I would go down the street to the next organic/natural foods store. There are many choices, all over the country.

As and aside, I moved to Austin in 1985, five years after this little organic hippie-deli food store began. They had a great deli-bar with all sorts of fresh and wholesome food. One of my favorites was a wheat roast salad. 40 years later, I asked the deli Fayetteville manager if they had the recipe. He could not find it anywhere on their computer system. Too bad.

If you scan a QR code (not download, just scan) it just takes you to a web page, no different from clicking on any url. Individual sites usually track clicks and site visits, recording your ip address and other information that connects your activity to you personally. If the site uses Google Analytics (most do) all of that information is aggregated by Google which then uses that information to sell ads targeted at you. Google also freely shares your information with the US government, no matter where you live.

If you don't want this to happen to you, you need to use Brave browser and a VPN. Both are very easy to use and free (there are paid or free vpns).

Also, turn on every privacy feature of your smart phone, turn off all the data collection and tracking (this is easier on apple phones than Google phones, though you can't trust apple either.

Never use the password savers built in to browsers, they are not secure and the owner of the browser (Firefox or Google, etc) can probably access them and share them with the government. Use Bitwarden or another password protector instead.

Last, if a website lets you opt out of tracking, opt out of tracking.

Nearly every volume retailer has a Touchless Checkout (or other name for the same tech) project. It's a means of loss prevention, along with convenience, health and labor objectives. Not saying anyone should be happy with it, but this is widespread and imminent for retail, not just Amazon.

He causes all, both small and great, rich and poor, free and slave, to receive a mark on their right hand or on their foreheads, 17 and that no one may buy or sell except one who has the mark or the name of the beast, or the number of his name.

If anyone worships the beast and his image, and receives his mark on his forehead or on his hand, 10 he himself shall also drink of the wine of the wrath of God, ...

11 And the smoke of their torment ascends forever and ever; and they have no rest day or night, who worship the beast and his image, and whoever receives the mark of his name.”

There are ways to obfuscate them trending your habits. It's all about what you buy nowadays. They can figure out what you are up to. Specifically they are after non-habits. You often buy a list of goods then all of a sudden you buy something outside of categories you normally buy. They take that information and flag it. They meaning the companies you buy from along with their 3rd party partners. Go read up on the terms of service.

I'm in the wholesale food industry and I can assure you, every major food retailer tracks your purchases now. Either by club card, credit card or phone number. This data is critical to inventory control and they are not going to stop tracking among other things (product variety). The QR code at Whole Foods is so that they can reduce employee counts and save you from standing in line. You scan the code get what you want and walk out the door. It's all about cost control and yes they allow for a certain percentage of theft. You can shop somewhere else.

So far Aldi and Publix do not track although both have apps. I pay cash, buy my own groceries (don't order for pickup) and don't use the app. Walmart also doesn't have an app or loyalty card but the neighborhood markets have only self checkout so I rarely use those stores.

lol you apparently do not understand data and analytics. Just because "they" whoever they are have some of your information does not mean you should hand over your shopping habits.
