For more than two months, Revolver has worked to expose the true nature of the 2020 presidential election. Powerful forces in the national media, academia, intelligence services, and the courts are fighting to prevent America from holding an ordinary vote on November 3. Instead, they plan to pull off an Eastern Europe-style “color revolution,” where institutional forces are used to bring about the intended outcome regardless of what the law says or what the public wants, while giving the whole process a gloss of democratic legitimacy.

Harassment, censorship, and intimidation of Trump supporters by any means necessary is a key element of the “color revolution” strategy. And Brandy Zadrozny of NBC News is a key hatchet woman working on behalf of the oligarchs.

Zadrozny has a long history of targeting Trump supporters for doxing, censorship, and harassment. She poses as a neutral reporter, but like so many other “journalists” in 2020, she is simply an ideologically-motivated hitman.

Brandy, via Twitter

Not only does Zadrozny brag about doxing Trump supporters, she actually wrote the book on it. Incidentally, there is one group of people Zadrozny does not support doxing — pedophiles. Allow us to explain.

Zadrozny was a major contributor to the “Verification Handbook”, a book for online journalists. Specifically, Zadrozny wrote a guide on how to unethically dox anonymous people online. Zadrozny appears to use paid, dark-data search engines to dox the personal information of anonymous Trump supporters online — obtaining property records, phone information, and even their Amazon wish lists.

Zadrozny is part of a press corps deployed to cover “misinformation, disinformation, and extremism” after the Internet fueled President Donald Trump’s win in 2016. This new journo beat was created to surveil, slander, and censor online voices that counter ruling class narratives.

DEMOCRACY MATTERS
Strategic Plan for Action

PRIVATE & CONFIDENTIAL

We will apply lessons learned.

Generally speaking and simply put Democrats got clobbered in the digital space.

Digital programs—both tactical and messaging—failed to actively listen to and engage the online grassroots universe.

The Trump camp spoke effectively to the grassroots and relied on online channels to disseminate information and misinformation and influence the media, even getting fake stories onto cable TV.

And the right colonized Facebook, which has established a virtual monopoly on information distribution.

Our digital efforts were largely focused on changing the narrative with the traditional media versus voters. This worked to a point but wasn't enough in the face of a news media incentivized by profit and access and fearful of intimidation and bullying by the Trump forces.

We will fully adapt to the new reality, and we will win.

Here's how:

Read: Censorship

In the next four years, Media Matters will continue its core mission of disarming right-wing misinformation, while leading the fight against the next generation of conservative disinformation: The proliferation of fake news and propaganda now threatening the country's information ecosystem. Here's what success will look like:

- Serial misinformers and right-wing propagandists inhabiting everything from social media to the highest levels of government will be exposed, discredited.
- Internet and social media platforms, like Google and Facebook, will no longer uncritically and without consequence host and enrich fake news sites and propagandists.
- Toxic alt-right social media-fueled harassment campaigns that silence dissent and poison our national discourse will be punished and halted.

American Bridge will cement itself as the standard-bearer of opposition research, build on its role as a progressive clearinghouse for information that drives the narrative on Republican officeholders and candidates, and be at the epicenter of Democrats' work to regain power—starting in 2017 and building to 2020. Here's what success will look like:

- Trump will be defeated either through impeachment or at the ballot box in 2020.
- The balance of power will shift back to Democrats. We will measurably impact US Senate, gubernatorial, and state legislative races.
- We will free ourselves from solely relying on the press. Our robust digital program will reach voters directly online.

Why did NBC News hire an obviously partisan hack to do the dirty work of George Soros-funded Media Matters? “Trump will be defeated either through impeachment or the ballot box in 2020.”

It turns out this “Disinformation Expert” (practitioner, not analyst) authored a How-To Guide for doxxing intensely personal digital data of anonymous Trump supporters online. This guide is marketed to fellow journo who flunked the same ethics class.

1. Investigating Social Media Accounts

Written by: Brandy Zadrozny

Brandy Zadrozny is an investigative reporter for NBC News, where she mostly covers misinformation, disinformation and extremism on the internet.

Nearly every story I report involves social media sleuthing. From profile backgrounding to breaking news to longer investigations, social media platforms offer some of the best ways to learn about a subject's real life — their family, friends, jobs, personal politics and associations — as well as a window into secret thoughts and hidden online identities.

It's an incredible time to be a journalist; people increasingly live their lives online and tools to find and search a subject's social profiles are ubiquitous. At the same time, both normal folks and bad actors are getting smarter about hiding their tracks. Meanwhile, social media platforms like Facebook have reacted to negative press about privacy breaches and harmful ideologies spread on their platform by closing down the tools that journalists and researchers have become reliant on to uncover stories and identify people.

In the following chapter I'll show some core approaches for investigating social accounts. The tools are the ones currently in my rotation, but before long they'll be killed by Facebook or replaced by something better. The reporters who are best at this work have their own processes and gadgets to get there, but really, as in any brand of reporting, obsession and (virtual) shoe leather yield the best results. Be prepared to read thousands of tweets, click until the end of the Google results, and dive down a social media rabbit hole if you want to collect the tiny biographical clues that will help you answer the question, "Who is this?"

Username

A username is sometimes all we have, which is fine, because it's almost always where we start. Such was the case of a then-New Hampshire Republican state representative who built one of Reddit's most popular and odious men's communities. The investigation behind the unmasking of the architect of Reddit's The Red Pill, now a quarantined community, started with the username "pk_atheist."

Some people hold on to usernames, using them with minimal variations, across various platforms and email providers. The more security-focused, like the New Hampshire state representative, create and ditch usernames with each new endeavor.

Using third-party vendors so expensive access “depends on your newsroom’s budget,” Zadrozny tries to scrape phone and property records from your digital footprint. She touts access to your Amazon Wish List, “a gold mine for learning about what a person reads, wants, buys.” You wouldn’t want to be caught reading the wrong books, would you, Comrade?

[-] pk_atheist [S] 2 points 3 years ago

I don't think we can grow if we ever go private. It goes without saying, you should invest in a decent throwaway that cannot be traced back to you.

permalink embed parent

Whatever the case, there are a few sites that you should feed the username you're searching into.

First, I plug the username into Google. People — especially younger ones who eschew the larger social platforms — tend to leave a trail even in more unexpected places, including comment sections, reviews and forums, that can lead you to information and other accounts.

Along with a Google search, use proprietary services. They cost money and depending on your newsroom's budget, you may or may not have access. Most shops have Nexis, which is great for public records and court documents but sadly lacking in the email/username department. It's also useful for researching people only in the United States. Pipl and Skopenow are among the best tools I've found for cross referencing "real world" information like phone numbers and property records with online records like emails and usernames, and both work globally. These paid search engines often provide phone and property records, but they can also identify Facebook and LinkedIn profiles that remain even after an account has been closed. They also connect accounts that people have largely forgotten about, such as old blogs and even Amazon wish lists — a gold mine for learning about what a person reads, buys and wants. You also get a lot of false positives with these, so I tend to start my investigation with their results and continue with other means of verification.

The screenshot shows the Pipl search engine interface. The search bar contains 'brandy zadrozny' and 'Location (optional)'. The search results are displayed on the left, showing '8 Emails', '1 Relationship', '12 additional Places', '3 additional Phones', '1 additional Username', '7 additional Jobs', and '68 additional Sources'. The main profile for Brandy Zadrozny is shown on the right, including a photo, age (39 years old), gender (Female), and language (Speaks English). Her career history includes: Reporter at NBC News (Internet, Platforms, and Times since 2018), Reporter / Senior Researcher at The Daily Beast (since 2013), News Librarian / Researcher at Fox News Channel (2011-2013), Reference and Instruction Librarian at Champlain College (2011-2013), and Research Associate at United Way of Chittenden County (2010-2011). Her education includes a MA from Pratt Institute (2007-2008). Her usernames include 'brandyzadrozny' and 'Brandy Lynn jolly'.

Let's say you're a patriotic anonymous Twitter user. One day, POTUS retweets you. Wow, cool! But then Comrade Zadrozny from NBC says your account amplifies harmful narratives, so she sets out to dox you. This could happen to anyone. But in this case, it happened to the great Columbia Bugle account.

This is just slimy and creepy.

With a new investigation, I like to start at the beginning of someone's Twitter history and work forward in time. You can get there by hand, with an assist from an autoscroller chrome extension, or you can use Twitter's advanced search to limit the time frame to the first few months of an account's existence.

Curiously, the first six months of this account shows zero tweets.

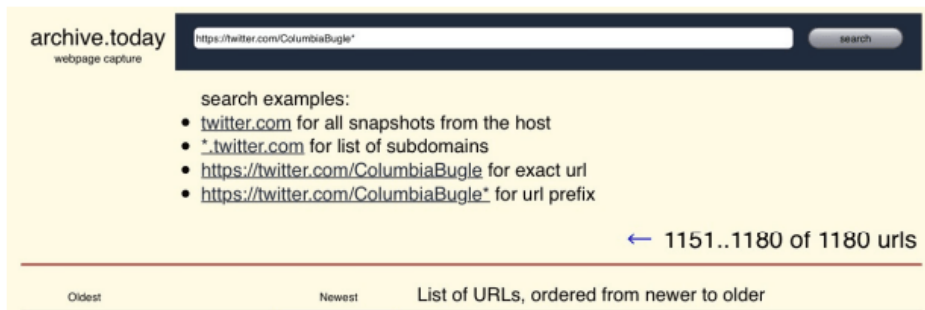

This suggests that the person behind The Columbia Bugle might have deleted his earlier tweets. To find out why that might be, I can tweak my search. Instead of tweets from the account I'll look for any tweets mentioning The Columbia Bugle.

These conversations confirm that ColumbiaBugle erased its first year of tweets, but doesn't tell us why and the first accounts that the account interacted with don't offer many clues.

To find recently deleted tweets, you can search Google's cache; older deleted tweets can also sometimes be accessed in the Internet Archive's Wayback Machine or another archive. The manual archive site archive.is turns up several deleted tweets from where ColumbiaBugle participated in an event where college students wrote pro-Trump messages on their campuses. To see all the tweets someone may have archived from that account, as I did to find this tweet, you can search by URL prefix, using an asterisk after the account name like this:

But what else should we expect from an establishment disinformation commissar?

Zadrozny is particularly proud of her efforts to dox secret accounts that deliberately wish to remain anonymous, and she brags at her talent for invading their privacy:

My favorite kind of stories are those that reveal the real people behind influential, anonymous social media accounts. These secret accounts are less reliant on the algorithm, and more carefully crafted to be an escape from public life. They allow someone to keep tabs on and communicate with family and friends apart from their public account, or to communicate the ideas and opinions that for personal or political reasons, they dare not say out loud.

[\[Data Journalism\]](#)

Zadrozny's biggest target in 2020 is Qanon. Instead of simply covering the online movement like an objective and ethical journalist would, Zadrozny has an ideological commitment to suppressing it. Her journalism is written with the clear goal of justifying censorship. When Facebook responded accordingly, she went on Twitter to brag about silencing "my" groups.

While Zadrozny is passionately committed to doxing and silencing her political foes, there's another group she is more sympathetic toward: pedophiles.

In 2018, Alain Malcolm drove to a house in Bristol, Connecticut, planning to rape a 14-year-old. Fortunately, there was no 14-year-old. Instead Malcolm was catfished by the local group POPSquad (short for Prey on Predators), which shamed him on camera. Shortly after, Malcolm hanged himself.

In a long article written shortly afterwards on a vigilante group that targeted sexual predators, Zadrozny complained at length about the suffering of pedophiles confronted by the POPSquad. In an incredible segment of the article, she glamorized a "tall and handsome" alleged pederast who "wholly subscribed to the American dream."

On a cool evening in October, Alain Malcolm, 20, walked into a vacant two-story colonial house in Bristol, Connecticut. Two members of a local internet vigilante group — who regularly try to expose and shame alleged child predators they entice online — were waiting for him.

Malcolm was tall and handsome. The oldest son of Jamaican immigrants, he wholly subscribed to the idea of the American dream. In high school, Malcolm was vice president of the Future Business Leaders of America club, assistant captain of the tennis and swim teams and a member of the student council and Model United Nations. He started a social marketing business at 15.

After graduating in 2016, Malcolm filled his Instagram and Facebook feeds with photos of New York high-rises, bathroom selfies in three-piece suits and links to news articles in which he was featured. He went to community college while working as a junior buyer for a local circuit-board manufacturer and was the subject of a Connecticut Public Television series that profiled recent high school graduates. Earlier this year, he was named one of Litchfield County's 40 Leaders Under 40.

Starting in high school, Malcolm used apps like Tinder and Grindr to meet men from around the state, friends said. On that October night, he had come to Bristol to meet someone younger, purportedly a 14-year-old boy "going on 15," according to a video posted by the digital vigilante group known as POPSquad.

When Malcolm arrived, he found that there was no boy — there was only POPSquad. For the 126th time in two years, the group — an acronym for Prey on Predators — had catfished a man on the internet, posing as an underage teen on hookup apps and luring him into a meetup, this time at an empty home whose owner allows it to be used for the group's stings, according to POPSquad.

Facebook told NBC News that it is aware of these groups and does not ban them outright, although much of what they do appears to violate Facebook's rules against shaming or cyberbullying.

[\[NBC News\]](#)

Doxing Trump supporters? Good. Exposing pedophiles? Very, very bad.

Zadrozny is representative of dozens if not hundreds of journalists in 2020. She doesn't seek to inform the public or fairly present issues. Instead, she is a commissar, an ideological enforcer who probes the personal lives of class enemies in an effort to intimidate, humiliate, silence, and destroy them.

Why does NBC News — which purports to be a mainstream, nonpartisan broadcast news network — have on their payroll an obviously partisan hack who brags about doxing Trump supporters, glamorizes pedophiles, and seeks to protect child predators from exposure?

This is the first story in an ongoing series. Revolver will be interviewing and profiling regular, average Americans who were targeted by Comrade Zadrozny for life-threatening harassment. More to come.

Doxxing only works if you feel you need to be afraid. Stop being afraid of what you think the worst outcomes could be. Even if they can screw with you, it is only to a certain degree and this tactic only works when they can do it is isolation.
